Brian Gallagher has resigned as the Director of Sports Medicine at Harvard-Westlake after four years working in the athletic department.

Gallagher has accepted the position of Director of Operations, Sports Testing, at Comprehensive Drug Testing (CDT), Inc. In this role he will manage the operations associated with the drug testing of professional sports leagues throughout North America, including Major League Baseball, the National Hockey League and Major League Soccer.

"I thoroughly enjoyed my time at Harvard-Westlake," said Gallagher. "I would like to thank Terry Barnum and Rick Commons for allowing me to serve as Director of Sports Medicine and to work with so many great students and coaches. I wish everyone in the Wolverine community the best of luck for a healthy and successful future."

Gallagher joined Harvard-Westlake in 2017 and led a staff of one part-time and three full-time athletic trainers. He also taught a Sports Science course via Harvard-Westlake's Institute of Sports Science and Medicine (ISSM).

"We are extremely grateful for everything that Brian Gallagher has done for Harvard-Westlake School and our athletic program," said Terry Barnum, Head of Athletics. "His knowledge, professionalism, and commitment to our athletes made Sports Medicine a center of excellence at our school. We will miss him and wish him the best of luck."
